Excerpt: .thus properly connected the cover is bolted down on the lower half, and the whole of the interior of the box is filled with insulating compound through the small hole at the top of the cover, thereby completely insulating the copper conductors, the cable connectors, and the ends of the tubes. Finally, the hole in the cover is closed with a cast iron cap. These coupling boxes are also made in the form of tees for making branch connections, and in the form of elbows for turning corners, the ball ends attached to the tubes and the sockets into which they fit being designed to permit of variation in direction through an arc of 18 degrees on either side of the central position. Scttn tces or branches to the consumers premises consist of short lengths of tube which tap the mains by means of three way or four way service boxes, the latter readily permitting the taking of two services from one joint. Services are never taken from the feeders, but the latter are brought to distributing boxes containing three copper rings to which the conductors are connected and branched out to one or more mains which are led out through fuses to supply the districts. SURFACE OF STREET Pot Heads.--The upper end of a lateral cable is equipped with a discharge bell, which is commonly called a pot head. The purpose of a pot head is to hermetically seal the end of the...
