Excerpt: . . . of England is Morans very serviceable English Government (Longmans, Green and Co. ) AMERICAN HISTORY AND CIVICS. Dr. D. D. Wallace, Wofford College. Teach and emphasize those things that have proved in the long run of importance, by reason of their impress upon their times or their influence upon later development. This will lead to the omission of many a hoary anecdote and many a battle whose name and date have uselessly vexed generations of school children. Let us pass rapidly in review the great periods of American history and apply to them our principle. In the period of exploration the pupils need to know little regarding the Spaniards, except that a number of Spanish explorers by splendid enterprise and courage penetrated the wildernesses of the new world, and established themselves permanently in certain extensive regions to the south by their daring, their patience, and largely by their monopoly of the field; that they failed to occupy what is now the United States and Canada, because they were already fully occupied to the southwards and because of the vigorous competition of France and England. The names of individual explorers, excepting three or four, are of no importance to American school children in the years 1907 et ad infinitum. The foregoing paragraph may be applied in principle to the French in Canada, though, on account of the importance and magnitude to this day of the issues so closely contested between them and the English on this...
