GAO reviewed the Department of Energys (DOE) approach for identifying carryover balances from previous years budgets that may be available to reduce budget requests for new fiscal years. GAO found that: (1) DOE does not use a uniform, effective method of identifying carryover balances; (2) DOE makes separate, general estimates of excess funds in its individual programs; (3) some DOE programs have reduced their carryover balance while others have allowed their carryover balances to increase; (4) the DOE annual report on uncostered obligations is not used to identify potential carryover balances because it does not identify all of the carryover balances, identify all of the uncostered obligations that are available to reduce DOE budget request, or include enough information to be useful during the formulation of DOE budget; (5) within DOE, the Office of Waste Management has studied the operations of DOE programs and developed standard expectations for their levels of uncostered obligations; (6) the Office of Waste Management has determined that balances in excess of one months worth of operating activities funding may indicate carryover balances and should be investigated; (7) within DOE, the Office of the Chief Financial Officer has suggested estimating the uncostered obligations at the start of each fiscal year using estimates of yearly costs or past costs; and (8) the various plans developed in DOE have not been implemented departmentwide and would need to be altered to fit individual programs. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
